In the field of pencil writing instruments, devices have been developed for holding a pencil in a writing position. Various hand grips have been used for this purpose. One of the more common hand grips is the conventional pencil grip. This grip is best suited for use in typing on a typewriter keyboard and the like. However, this grip does not provide a particularly comfortable and stable writing posture. To provide an alternate hand grip for holding a writing instrument, various type of holders have been developed. Typically, these holders have a strap or a rubber band attached to an object and wrapped around the wrist of the user. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 1,132,922 to Tewkesbury discloses a hand grip for holding a pencil. The Tewkesbury grip has an elongate U-shaped hand grip portion which is secured to a writing instrument by means of a flat, rubber-like band. The band is wrapped around the wrist of the user. A series of apertures is formed in the hand grip for receiving the writing instrument. U.S. Pat. No. 1,726,249 to Erb is directed to a hand grip which is adapted to hold a pocket watch. The Erb grip has a hand grip element which is removably mounted to a watch case. A flexible, rubber band is attached to a pair of opposed portions of the watch case. The opposite end of the band is secured to the hand grip element by means of a pin. U.S. Pat. No. 2,331,842 to Brokaw discloses a hand grip which is used to secure a pair of sewing needles together. The Brokaw grip has a U-shaped hand grip element which is secured to one of the needles. A knotted end of the rubber band is used to secure the grip to the other needle. U.S. Pat. No. 3,
