Re: Windows Vault Password Decryptor No. If you don't have any of the previous keys, you'll be asked to purchase the software. I've paid for it before, I'll pay for it again. The software has never let me down. I'd use any tool for that task, but I don't have to. I'm a developer and I don't need to decrypt someone else's passwords. Re: Windows Vault Password Decryptor @01 - I understand what you're trying to say, but I stand on this one point of confusion. Windows Vault Password Decryptor does not encrypt the password that the user enters. For maximum security, the user enters his/her name and the password, which is then stored. Then, when the user wants to log in to a particular program, he or she enters their name and password, which the program compares to the data that was entered previously. If there is a match, the program is up and running. If not, then the program is locked. It does not encrypt the user's password, because the data is either imported into the local database from a different source, or is encrypted by the user when he or she creates a password. Re: Windows Vault Password Decryptor I use it and I do understand what you are saying. It is very easy to use software. The only
