state office with my feedback. "I was so close to getting on the ballot," she told me. "I was all over the place. People in this town, they kept asking me to do it. They were insisting that I do it." "They were insisting that I do it" seems to be a common theme around here in North Idaho. A close friend of mine is on the same," she laughed. "Everywhere I go, I get offers like 'Do you want to do this?' or 'Do you want me to talk to the mayor?' I am doing work in the community and going into schools and providing services. I have some big things in the works and I have to stay on my toes and keep with the times. The time for me to stop trying to better myself and my service to this town is passed. I just have to keep going." Marena Diaz tells me that her plans for 2014 are to continue her involvement in education and the community in some way or another. "As I start off this year, I'm trying to follow the 'Yes we can, we are the 99%' campaign. I'm trying to really focus on making people aware of what I've been doing for the past six years." Her eye brightens as she tells me that she has plans to volunteer to help a local woman who just had a baby. As I'm leaving the diner, I see Della in the store with her little one. It is such a
