What's new:

It's simpler than you might think, and this method will scale to your needs. First, build a canvas of growth for your forms. In this canvas, you'll list the seasons you want to create. For example, for one of our most recent projects, we ended up with: Winter > Spring > Summer > Autumn. Now, again, this method is best for those who like to use their own or an addon mod manager, as it requires the mod manager to target GTA:Online Credits in script, however it does not require that you start the script by pressing spacebar, which is key for those using VAC or similar mod manager commands. So, if you prefer to have it run automatically, you're free to have it do so by including it's own keybinding in the mod manager. I've provided a decent example: Third, write out a list of the value/literal/old-style values (1.foo) that you want to change for each season. In our case, we had a number of values that we hoped to change, such as whether you can gain MDrive SP, in addition to having certain perks. You can use this list to target the mod in an addon mod manager, or create custom JSON lists for your mod-maker, if you so choose. If you have multiple values, you can tag it accordingly (or if you like, you can also use an array): Fourth, you can then turn those values into the new values you'd like: Simply go through and target each season for you list, and replace what you're trying to change. Here's the result: Again, this is best for those using an addon mod manager, and it does not require that you start the mod by pressing spacebar. Personally, I use CK for all my mods, but if you're going the mod manager route, this is way easier and cleaner than having to manually go through each character. Also, you can use your mod manager to store the changes for your 6.
