The interaction of DNA with proteins can be a highly dynamic process. In contrast to the structural studies that have been extensively performed on nucleic acid G-quadruplex (G4) structures, there are few investigations of their dynamics. We here report on the dynamics of two human telomeric sequences G4-[d(T2G4)], [d(T2G4T4)], [d(T2G4T4G4)] and their [G4] variants, with benzophenanthridine and spiroligand photoswitchable fluorescent dyes. The dyes were selectively excited at 387 nm and 488 nm, and the resulting fluorescence emission was collected between 400 and 450 nm, respectively. A series of time-resolved fluorescence measurements showed that all investigated G4 structures have fast dynamics, with time constants (tau(D)) between 1 and 8 ns. The average tau(D) of the [d(T2G4)], [d(T2G4T4)], and [d(T2G4T4G4)] sequences at pH 7.5 was 1.3, 1.1, and 2.4 ns, respectively. In contrast, the [G4] variants had twofold higher values of the average tau(D), 2.9 and 8.8 ns, respectively, with tau(D) of the parallel strand being larger than the antiparallel strand. The time-resolved fluorescence measurements of these structures show that the dyes have preferential binding to one orientation of the G4 structure as described by a simple photochemical model, which was supported by NMR spectroscopy.The present invention relates to a process for producing a silicone gel which is used for medical purposes. Silicone gels used in medical purposes can be divided into contact lenses and ophthalmic lenses, such as intraocular lenses, contact lenses, and artificial corneas. These silicone gels are prepared by pouring a silicone-containing monomer into a mold and polymerizing the monomer to form a silicone polymer gel, as described, for example, in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication Nos. 59-
