We report a case of vaginal malignant transformation of a giant condyloma acuminatum, which was initially treated with topical 5-fluorouracil for 6 months. As the neoplastic tissue did not regress, a staged operation was performed after the cumulative dose of 5-fluorouracil reached 15.5 g. The neoplastic tissue was removed completely, and the defect was repaired primarily. The patient had no evidence of local recurrence or metastases 26 months postoperatively. Mechanical triggering for drug delivery. There is an enormous demand to design, fabricate, and deliver systems for delivery of therapeutic agents in a targeted, controlled, and noninvasive manner. The present review describes general principles of materials used for drug delivery triggered by various stress-induced stimuli. Nanostructures, such as nanoparticles and nanowires, are used for the delivery of both hydrophilic and hydrophobic drugs. They also provide the possibility to deliver curable and biodegradable materials. Functionalization of nanostructures with bioactive molecules allows for the selective and directed delivery of bioactive agents. A variety of stress-induced stimuli, such as magnetic force, ultrasound, and pH gradients, are used for the delivery of nanostructures. Further applications of mechanical triggering to real-time and noninvasive, local drug delivery are also discussed. You can see the viewEncapsulation used to set whether JS source or a React Native component is used. You can see that you can set the component property with a JSX expression. You can see that the props used to create a component are nullable. You can see the lifecycle methods used. You can see that state is also defined. With that in mind, let's get to the class... Document Lists As I said in the introduction, react-native-elements provides the component to allow for a native-like experience, in this case, a list. The remaining part is taken care of by the rest of the class's code: import React, { Text, View, StyleSheet } from 'react-native'; import { Content, Title, Subtitle, Text, View } from 'react-native-elements'; const home = () => (alert ('TEST!') } > TEST!); const styles = StyleSheet.create ({ onPress = { () => alert ('TEST!') } }; As we can see in the code above, there are no components for styling, just simple text components. EnjoyEx-subway worker found guilty in Tarnation slaying Kiel Johnson faces a life sentence for suffocating girlfriend, Tracyna Deshon, 30, on a Manhattan subway platform in January, 2013 A former Brooklyn subway conductor was found guilty Thursday of killing his girlfriend and stuffing her body in a suitcase in a bizarre scheme to get a lighter sentence for a drug-related murder conviction. Kiel Johnson, 31, faces a mandatory sentence of life in prison when he's sentenced in January on first-degree murder and other charges for suffocating girlfriend Tracyna Deshon, 30, on a Manhattan subway platform in January, 2013. Deshon's corpse was found wrapped in plastic in a red suitcase behind Brooklyn Borough Hall that day, more than a year after Johnson murdered her in his home in Brooklyn's East Flatbush neighborhood. The case drew national attention when it began to unfold, leading to the Dec. 30 arrest of Johnson at the Moynihan Station in the Bronx after a yearlong investigation. He had pleaded guilty in 2014 to manslaughter in Deshon's slaying, which took place in the early morning hours of Jan. 13, 2013. The Bronx district attorney said at the time of Johnson's plea that he paid Deshon, who left him for another man, a total of $4,000 at a Red Roof Inn in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn, a week before the murder. Johnson admitted to a judge then that he killed her "for the money and for the thrill of seeing her die." He said he was convicted in 2011 for the murder of a drug dealer
