The first three periods did not produce any interesting results. The `!` command was used in the last period to take the average value of the y-axis; a simple linear regression was used. PS. I do not know whether this is of any use to you. EDIT The following is my code, after the users answer. I started to write it the first time I asked this question, although I have kept this version because the solution I received on the forum, which is very long, is rather out of time. `ind = 2:4`
