LISTEN TO ARTICLE 2:24 SHARE THIS ARTICLE Share Tweet Post Email Photographer: Hajo Christoph/dpa via AP Photo Photographer: Hajo Christoph/dpa via AP Photo German police said on Tuesday they were investigating whether a Russian-speaking hacker stole credit card numbers from an exposed server from a bank that invested in the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, which German Chancellor Angela Merkel opposes. The German hacker said he was responsible for the data breach, which initially hit the online accounts of a Chinese banking group, MegaFon, and contained information about 5.6 million card numbers, a spokesman for Hamburg prosecutors said. Hackers can often use stolen credit card numbers to carry out fraudulent online transactions in the West. MegaFon said it had informed the relevant card-issuing banks of the breach. Police said the attacker had sought the data from the German branch of the bank, Berenberg Bank, and had published some of the data online. The man, based in the U.K., said on Monday he used a Russian-language hacking forum to acquire the data, according to a statement posted on the forum. Authorities were able to trace the computer to his address in a southwest German city, it said. Berenberg Bank is not part of the Nord Stream 2 project, the gas pipeline that will carry gas from Russia to Germany under the Baltic Sea, a major pillar of Merkel's European push. The spokeswoman said the data breach was just one part of a two-pronged probe, and that authorities were also looking into why the server was exposed. (Updates with police and MegaFon comment in 11th paragraph)The present invention relates to a magnetic recording medium such as a tape, a disk and the like, and in particular, to a protective cover, a method and a coating composition of the magnetic recording medium. The surface of a magnetic recording medium is provided with a lubricant, a water repellent or the like so as to ensure running stability of the
