The following knowledge assumes that you are familiar with graphic design and that you know some of the basics of using Photoshop. There are a few things that you can do in Photoshop for free with the free version and there are tools that you can use if you're willing to pay for them. How to learn Photoshop in 10 minutes? This tutorial will teach you to use Photoshop in a short time. If you are interested in starting to edit photographs or learn how to use Photoshop, this tutorial will teach you the basics of Photoshop. When you have completed this tutorial, you should be able to edit images, create a slideshow using images and use Photoshop to create new graphics. 1. Choose a comfortable place for you Before you start, make sure you have a comfortable place where you can work. It's a good idea to sit or stand at a desk. You don't need anything fancy or expensive, just something that is comfortable and quiet. Make sure you can see your screen to the best of your ability, and you also want to be able to see your desk. If you are using a laptop, you will also need a place to put it for the time you will be editing images. 2. Turn on Photoshop If you are using a Mac computer, switch your Mac to version 10, which is also called the Mavericks version. Mac OSX Click the Mac icon on the top left of your desktop. Then click About this mac. Next, click the More Info button on the bottom left. Click the More Info button again and this time select System Report. Next, scroll down to the Software section in the bottom left of the window. Click the Adobe Photoshop Elements 12.0 icon to update the software. This will also update your software to the current version. Windows Go to Start Menu then type in "Control Panel". Go to the Control Panel window and click the drop down menu that says Programs and Features. Click the type in "Adobe Photoshop Elements 12.0" and click OK to update the software. 3. Q: Getting Views From the MapFragment So i have a mapfragment in my fragment. I am trying to get the current View of the fragment to toggle another view when clicked. public class MapFragment extends Fragment { private SupportMapFragment mapFragment; private MapView mapView; @Override public void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.fragment_map); mapView = (MapView) findViewById(R.id.mapview); mapFragment = (SupportMapFragment) getSupportFragmentManager().findFragmentById(R.id.mapfragment); } @Override public void onViewCreated(View view, Bundle savedInstanceState) { mapFragment.getMapAsync(this); } @Override public void onResume() { super.onResume(); Log.i("MapView", "View Created"); } @Override public void onPause() { super.onPause(); Log.i("MapView", "View Destroyed"); } @Override public void onDestroyView() { super.onDestroyView(); Log.i("MapView", "View Destroyed"); } @Override public void onDestroy() { super.onDestroy(); Log.i("MapView", "View Destroyed"); } } When i debug i get the onResume, onPause, onViewCreated, onDestroyView Log statements. However when i click on the map i only get the onDestroyView and then the map. If i press "back" I will get the onDestroyView and then the onCreateView. Any Help would be greatly appreciated. A: I have found the issue. I was creating the mapView as a private member of the MapFragment. Therefore on returning from a FragmentActivity onDestroyView was being called and the map was destroyed. This can be solved by accessing the MapView and changing the visibility depending

Scalable method for the fabrication of porous titanium as bone implant. This work demonstrates the use of the RF/DC plasma spray method for the fabrication of porous titanium implants. The method uses the DC current for the formation of a solid electrode, while applying RF current over a particulate titanium-based alloy for the sprouting of granules. Samples of cast porous Ti6A14V and machined Ti6A14V were prepared and subjected to the RF/DC process. The results showed that the porous structure and the morphology of the granules formed are significantly affected by the amount of voltage and the distance between the target and the receiving plate. The biocompatibility of the samples was evaluated using the in vitro assay of the cytotoxicity of the cells grown in the samples. The samples were also implanted in a tibial defect of a New Zealand white rabbit for evaluation of the therapeutic potential of the samples. Results showed that the implanted samples created an excellent environment for the healing of the bone. This study suggests that this method is suitable for the fabrication of porous titanium implants for use in bone reconstruction.Psst. There's a secret way to be a superhero. Elevating the kiddie level of "Spider-Man" and "Superman" has been a recurring theme among comic book fans, especially over the last few years. We've even covered Marvel's new "Spider-Man" TV show, "Arrow," and Batman/Superman creator Bob Kane's remarks on the "Batman vs. Superman" project over at DC. But in a world of comic book culture, it's a bit surprising that one of the most popular franchises of all time — the now somewhat tarnished "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" — has remained grounded to a sort of "childhood-like" level. After all, the majority of Turtles fans are at least in their early to mid-20s. "Nobody really gets the fact that the Turtles are out there, really, and they're not on TV in their own sitcom," said Joey P. from San Rafael, California, on a recent afternoon at San Diego Comic-Con. "They're in arcades." Penny Little from West Chester, Pennsylvania, is one of those fans. Little, who was not at Comic-
