North Korea is rejecting reports that President Trump has offered to meet Kim Jong Un, calling such suggestions a "load of nonsense." "We have no intention of holding talks with people who have betrayed us with their anti-DPRK moves," a statement from the North's foreign ministry said on Thursday, Reuters reported. "Trump's remarks in a South Korean newspaper that he might meet with us by holding military exercises next year is just a load of nonsense," said the statement from the country's press office. ADVERTISEMENT The statement also condemned joint U.S.-South Korean military exercises. "We totally reject the military exercise ever," it said. The Trump administration and North Korea's regime have had diplomatic relations since January. The North's state media gave renewed attention to the reclusive nation after the president's summit with Kim in Singapore last month. Pyongyang has claimed the meeting was a success, while the U.S. administration has indicated more progress needs to be made before reaching a nuclear disarmament deal. North Korea has called for an easing of sanctions on the country in return for Kim's denuclearization. The statement from the North's foreign ministry on Thursday did not discuss that part of the agenda. The U.S. and North Korea have been involved in intense diplomacy for months as the two countries attempt to advance their plans for denuclearization. The White House said on Wednesday that discussions are continuing between the two countries. "We're continuing to work with them, we're getting together, we have a military-
