Q: Jenkins multibranch pipeline not building branch with package name x.y.z+grip+gripeclipse I've been given the task of migrating a fork of a project to a new github account. I'd like to do this using a Jenkins pipeline, however there are quite a lot of git repositories. I've been tasked with migrating my local development to the new account, and to do so have made a multibranch pipeline, however I've run into a problem. The project that I'm using as a test case has the package name 'grip' and I'm getting build errors complaining that I can't found the class that implements the run() method. I've removed the package name from the buildscript, however the error remains. As you can see from the project layout, the package name is grip+grip+gripeclipse. mvn test worked fine until I created the multibranch pipeline. A: Grip will be compiled against the SNAPSHOT version of the GRIP-Eclipse plugin, which has different API requirements. What you need to do is exclude GRIP-Eclipse from the build by adding the following to your pipeline script: mavenCheckout code: $env:PATH = "path/to/m2/repo" $buildAll = true This will ignore the GRIP-Eclipse sources and recompile Grip as if the plugin was not on the classpath. Update I assume that you do not want your Jenkins server to be dependent on GRIP-Eclipse SNAPSHOT versions, so you need to make sure the version you use is the latest SNAPSHOT. To do so, you can use the tag versions to match your project's main branch. You can read more about it here. The long-term objective of the present proposal is the development of effective therapies to treat diabetes, a disorder which affects nearly 14 million Americans. Current therapies for diabetes mellitus are inadequate. The problems involved in developing effective therapies include identifying individuals at risk for progression to diabetes, lack of sensitivity and specificity of available biomarkers, and inadequate choice of endpoints for evaluating therapies. The goals of the proposed research are two-fold. The first is to determine how insulin sensitivity, glucose tolerance, and lipid profile respond to different drug regimens in type 2 diabetic patients enrolled in a randomized, placebo-controlled, double
