The aim of this study was to estimate the time course of alterations in fluidity and shape of erythrocytes in diabetic patients. The study included 38 patients with type 1 diabetes: 12 insulin-dependent patients without retinopathy and 26 with retinopathy. All the patients underwent ophthalmological examination. In addition they were examined by fluorescent light microscopy and rheo-optical measurements of erythrocytes. The alterations in erythrocyte membranes fluidity were detected earlier than those in shape of erythrocytes in all studied groups. The shape of erythrocytes was altered in the erythrocytes of insulin-dependent diabetics with the initial stage of retinopathy within 13.2 years. Popular March 25, 2008 Scientists Point To Food Based On Found In Ancient America by Sam Savage In Central America, human ancestors are thought to have hunted monkeys and birds the size of deer. They even ate sloths and giant armadillos, according to new research. The ancient inhabitants of the Americas did not rely on the hunt alone to provide their protein needs. In addition to hunting, they may have supplemented their diets by eating a wide variety of food, including fruits, fish and insects, according to a study appearing in the March issue of the journal Current Anthropology. The primates, birds, sloths and armadillos, named megafauna, also served an important role in the societies the people lived in. The researchers found traces of the animals' bones and teeth in the teeth of the ancient people that ate them. The remains are dated to about 15,000 years ago, some time between 11,000 and 7,500 years ago. A new technique developed by researchers at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, called Avizo, was used to analyze the skull of an ancient human, called "Big Fo
