Roma (Spanish: ), or simply Roma, is a 2006 Spanish drama film directed by Alfonso Cuarón and starring Michael Caine, Ángeles Mastretta and Alfredo Lozano. The film, which was shot entirely in English, is a black and white neo-noir shot as a largely biographical film. Cuarón intended to make a film about the passionate and visceral human experience of love and sexual attraction, without using a traditional narrative. He states that this is different to what he achieved in Amores Perros (2000). Cuarón said of his intentions for Roma: "I didn't have anything in mind. I was on my own, I had no idea where I was going with it. The idea was to make a film that was about love and sex. A film that was out there but not about a particular person."
