.China-North Korea
standoff: U.N. says Pyongyang has right to defend itself David Jackson threatens NKorea with 'fire and fury' President Trump unleashed his fiery warning to North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, who he called "Rocket Man" and "sick puppy". (July 7)

The United Nations said Thursday that North Korea has the right to defend itself against U.S. "aggression," following the Trump administration's remarks about using military force. The U.N. Security Council said in a statement after a closed meeting that "all relevant UN member states, the DPRK (North Korea) and regional organizations and parties concerned must abide by their obligations under international law."

That language echoed comments by China, which is North Korea's main ally and trading partner. Beijing has spoken out against U.S. threats of military force against

Pyongyang. In language that resembled the U.N. statement, China said after North Korea fired a missile into the East Sea of Japan on July 4 that it "strongly condemns and firmly opposes" any such action. The U.N. statement also rejected "any threat or use of force by the DPRK" and called for a "comprehensive and complete cessation of all weapons tests" to ensure the "safety and security" of its members. "Any resort to force would be totally unacceptable and an example of the highest level of irresponsibility," said the U.N. statement, which represents 193 member states. firing back at critics The U.N. statement was authorized by the president of the 15-member Security Council. It said the council "condemns the DPRK's illegal ballistic missile launch, and it strongly condemns and strongly rejects any threat or use of force against the DPRK. The Security Council calls upon all states to strictly and fully implement U.N. sanctions to their full and utmost extent." China, North Korea's main ally and trading partner, has rebuked the United States' new national security strategy that includes a vow to strengthen alliances and develop new relationships with China. China has long sought to use North Korea to balance U.S. influence in Asia and leverage the Asian giant's economic resources, according to the Washington-based Stimson Center, which advocates a strong U.S. military.
